

Video presentations in the College Admission Process

Last Saturday, I spent the morning coaching one of my wonderful students through the process of producing a 1-1/2 minutes video about himself to support his college applications. You may have heard of some highly selective colleges giving students this option. Last Year, Yale allowed students using the Coalition's Application to submit a document, image, audio in response to a prompt. Mr. Aubin heard about that option last year; he submitted a short video documenting his Eagle Scout project. The content of the video impressed Yale's admissions committee. Mr. Aubin, is now a freshman at Yale.

Parents and Junior's, will you be producing a short video next year?

Loren Francis

Tags college, parents, students, video, presentation, coalition application, high school